

WILL CASE UP AGAIN

Forgery Charge to Be Pressed Against Aged Citizen.

TAMPERING WITH THE JURY

In Previous Case Officials Were Held
Responsible for the Disagreement.
William H. Skillman Rapidly Ageing Under Weight of Criminal Charges—Diversity of Opinion.

Somerville, N. J., Nov. 24.—William H. Skillman, aged seventy-four years, a former president of the New Jersey Horticultural Society, who has been prominent in the political and social affairs of Somerset County for half a century, will be placed on trial a second time in the Somerset court to-morrow for forging the will of his friend and neighbor, the late William Lanehart, a retired business man, of New York City, who died on his farm, near Blawieville, in March, 1905.

The Skillman case is one of the strangest and most sensational in the history of the Somerset courts. By the terms of the will, executed and filed in the Somerset surrogate's office by Skillman, purporting to be that of the late William Lanehart, Skillman is bequeathed one-half of Lanehart's estate, which is valued at $19,000. At the time of his death, Lanehart had deposited in a vault in the Hopewell National Bank a will, which bequeathed his entire estate to his next of kin, who were disinherited by the terms of the will filed by Skillman.

Call Will a Forgery.
Lanehart's relatives declared the Skillman will a forgery, and pointed out the fact that the alleged signature of Lanehart affixed to the will filed by Skillman had been first written with a lead pencil and then traced over with pen and ink. The will was contested in the Somerset Orphans' Court and the case lasted for several weeks. Judge Schenck declared the signature to the will was a forgery. Skillman applied from this decision to the higher courts, and the community became divided as to the guilt or innocence of the aged horticulturist.

While the civil case was still pending in the higher court, Skillman was indicted on a criminal charge of forgery and placed on trial in the Somerset court last May. Skillman had aged considerably under the serious charge, and tottered under the physical weight. The trial into court a physical wreck. The trial lasted a week, and during its progress it was rumored that strong influences were at work to save Skillman, and Judge Boorem, who presided at the trial, repeatedly warned the jury against this influence. After a long deliberation the jury disagreed, and it was reported at the time that it stood 9 for conviction and 3 for acquittal.

Jurors Are Approached.
After the jury was discharged, two of the jurors went before court and swore that they had been approached in behalf of Skillman during the progress of the trial, and the foreman of the jury swore that a deputy sheriff had visited the jury room and called one of the jurors out during the deliberation.

As the result of the revelations, Judge Boorem imposed a heavy fine on the two constables and sentenced the deputy sheriff to pay a fine and to spend ninety days in the county jail for contempt of court. The deputy sheriff applied for a writ of habeas corpus, and was released on bail, and his case is now pending before the supreme court. Since the disagreement of the jury in the criminal case, Chancellor McGie has rendered a decision in the civil case affirming the verdict of the lower court that the will filed by Skillman is a forgery.

MIDDIES ADOPT LACROSSE.
Game May Become a Regular Sport at the Naval Academy.

Annapolis, Md., Nov. 24.—There is every indication that lacrosse will be adopted as a regular sport at the Naval Academy. Like basketball, lacrosse has been under consideration for a long time, but since the former seems now to have been made a fixture, attention of the athletic authorities has been directed toward lacrosse.

The subject has been renewed with greater interest during the last few weeks, as the management of the teams at Harvard, Johns Hopkins University, and Swarthmore, have written asking for a game with the middies, should the sport be adopted.

The question seems to be assuming shape, and James McElrath, of New York, has been made captain of the team, and preliminary arrangements have been made looking to obtaining the necessary paraphernalia. Only a few of the middies are acquainted with the game, but there is no doubt that the sport will be flourishing in a few years.

TARHEELS ARE BUSY.
Making Preparations for Virginia Game at Norfolk.

Wilkes-Barre Official Would Have Auto Horns in Same Key.

Wilkes-Barre, Pa., Nov. 24.—No more are the residents of this city to be startled by the wailing cry of the automobile siren, the shrill shriek of the automobile whistle, or the varying notes of the many kinds of horns now used. City Council N. D. Jones has determined that all automobiles shall be equipped with the same kind of horns and that their notes shall be of the same key.

Mr. Jones has begun preparing an ordinance to this effect, which he will introduce in the council at the next meeting.

NEWS OF ALEXANDRIA

Railway Tracks in Danger
Owing to Slide of Earth.

PASSENGER TRAINS DELAYED

Bank Near New Union Station at Alexandria Weakened by Rains, and Repairs Are Being Made. Freight Motor Car, Which Plunged Into Hunting Creek, Still in Water.

WASHINGTON HERALD BUREAU,
(Bell Telephone 62.)
229 King Street.

Alexandria, Va., Nov. 24.—The west side of the huge bank of the Washington Southern Railway, situated directly north of the new union passenger station, over which all southbound passenger trains pass, is sliding, and railroad officials are experiencing difficulty in keeping up the bank. As a result of the sliding all southbound passenger trains have to go over the northbound track, and considerable delay is experienced, causing great inconvenience to all trains entering either north or south. A force of men are working night and day in order to prevent the bank from completely toppling over.

The excessive rains are in a large measure attributable for the falling of the earth composing the bank, although the fact that the bank is comparatively newly made is attributed by some to be the cause of its sliding. It being pointed out that the earth has not yet had a sufficient time to thoroughly settle.

When the bank was originally built, which was about two years ago, the builders experienced considerable difficulty and for some time it was a common occurrence for slides to happen. It is stated that until the work of filling it up is completed no trains will be allowed to pass over the track on the west side, as it is considered by the railway officials to be dangerous. Four tracks are laid on the big bank, two being for north and southbound passenger trains while two tracks also serve for north and southbound freight trains. The bank is about fifteen feet high.

The work of raising the car will be accomplished by the use of huge derricks. The members of the train's crew who were injured are reported to be rapidly recovering, and the condition of Motor-man Parks, who was the most seriously hurt of the three men composing the crew, is regarded as being very favorable.

MYSTERY DEEPENS IN SMITH TRAGEDY

he was asleep in his bed. The autopsy shows that the bullet did not strike the brain and it is believed that he staggered around the room for awhile and died from hemorrhage.

After shooting her husband, Mrs. Smith rushed out of the room and locked the door. She took the key with her when she went down stairs in her night gown to set fire to the house.

Story Told by Policemen.
Patrolman Langbein and Night Watchman Strow believed that the shot killed Smith was fired about 12:30 o'clock. They heard a report at that time, and tried to find where it had come from. About fifteen minutes later, while they were walking up Woodland avenue, they saw smoke coming from the basement of the Smith house, and rushed upon the veranda and tried to get in.

As the policemen were rapping at the door with their night sticks, Mrs. Smith in her night gown, appeared at the upper stairs window and asked what was the trouble.

"Your house is on fire," shouted the policeman. "Come down and let us in."

Mrs. Smith closed the window, and in less than two minutes the officers heard the muffled pistol shot and scream, which ended the life of Mrs. Smith. In these two minutes it is believed seeing the game was up, she scribbled the note to her sister-in-law requesting that her body be cremated.

Mr. Smith had considerable money on deposit in Baltimore, which together with personal property and life insurance, would amount to $25,000 to $30,000, and the police are quite anxious to find out whether he made a will, if so, who was named as the beneficiary.

The fact that Dr. Acton lived only nine months after his marriage to the dead woman, and that his death was caused by morphine poisoning, has prompted the inquiries. Mr. Cleveland, who has been associated with Mr. Smith for the past seven years, says that he is positive that there is no will in existence.

Says Couple Lived Happily.

Mr. Cleveland says that Mr. Smith and his bride lived happily together. The servants also say that they never saw any domestic trouble. During their nine months of married life Mr. Smith had given his bride about $3,000 worth of diamonds. He spent $11,000 in furnishing the house on Woodland avenue, and was paying $1,500 a year rent. Friends of Smith say that the woman could have no possible reason for wishing to get him out of the way.

"It is one of these cases of sudden and violent homicidal insanity," said Mr. Cleveland to-day. "I can account for it in no other way. Mrs. Smith had suffered from intense headaches, and this is probably what drove her crazy."

Ex-Alderman Hayward, of this city, who knew Smith, said he was an overworked man. He was extremely excitable. His daily work consisted of reading and answering from three to four hundred letters a day. Smith was so eccentric that after receiving typewritten replies from his secretary he would sign his name and then throw the letters on the floor. He would not allow any one to touch the letters on the floor while he was in the room.

Smith continually complained of being overworked, and regretted that he did not have time to take a rest or give more of his time to amusements which his wife was fond of.

Mrs. Smith often mentioned that she was sorry that Nicholas was so devoted to business that he did not have time to enjoy the pleasures of the outside world. She complained that her social amusements were not in accord with Mr. Smith's views. Because of Mr. Smith's retiring disposition, the couple did not mingle with their neighbors or take part in any of New Rochelle's social affairs.

KNOWN TO THE BULKLEYS.

Mystery in Woman's Claim That She Was Governor's Daughter.

New York, Nov. 25.—Something of the life and a little of the mystery surrounding the double identity of Mrs. Nicholas M. Smith, who shot her husband and then herself, after she had fled from her home in New Rochelle, early Saturday morning, were learned by an investigation into her past to-day. Before his marriage to the woman, who persisted in calling herself Grace Bulkley, and who said that she was the daughter of the late Lieut. Gov. William H. Bulkley, of Hartford, Conn., Nicholas Smith accompanied her to Hartford and heard Gen. Bulkley deny her claim to being his daughter before her death. This was several years after the woman had pressed her claim on the Bulkley family in one way or another.

From information given by a person intimate with the story of how this nameless woman endeavored to establish herself as a daughter of the well-known Hartford politician, it appears that Gen. Bulkley once went to Nicholas Smith, and in a long conversation, persuaded him to separate from the woman, who was not then his wife, convincing him, it would appear, that she was an impostor. How it was that the self-styled Grace Bulkley won Smith back and finally became his wife in the face of Gen. Bulkley's direct denunciation is a secret which will never be known.

According to the story told by one who knew the history of the Bulkley family, the first they heard of the woman now dead was back as far as 1887, when Gen. Bulkley received a telegram from New York, signed Graves, saying that it was that the self-styled Grace Bulkley, the general's daughter, was sick and destitute in New York, and that she could be found at a certain address, which was given in the telegram.

Gen. Bulkley turned the message over to a friend in New York, but no trace of the girl was found at the address given, nor could anything be learned of the person Graves, who signed the message.

After that time Gen. Bulkley was constantly receiving letters from Grace Bulkley, all pleading for recognition as his daughter. He paid no attention to any of them.

Early in 1898 Nicholas Smith went to Hartford to see Gen. Bulkley. He said that he had been living with his daughter Grace in apartments at West Seventy-ninth street, considering her his wife in everything but name. He told the general the story of the woman had made him believe, which was that she had been cast out and a cousin brought in to fill her place in the family. Smith said that his own father had refused to sanction his marriage with the woman unless she could gain her father's forgiveness and be rehabilitated in the family.

At that interview General Bulkley denied emphatically that he had any daughter but the Grace Bulkley, who was then Mrs. David Van Schaick, and told Smith of the letters he had received from the woman unknown to him. Following that episode, General Bulkley came down to New York to see Nicholas M. Smith, Sr., Smith's father, who was staying at the Colonial Club at the time. He had a

ROPER COACHED HARVARD.

Princeton May Bring About Renewal of Football Relations.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 24.—It was reported here last night on seemingly reliable authority that Princeton and Harvard will renew athletic relations next year, and that the eleven representing the two institutions will meet next fall.

Bill Roper, chief coach of Princeton's football team this season, coached the Harvard eleven Friday, giving it the benefit of the Tigers' experience against Yale. That the chief coach of a Princeton eleven should coach a Harvard team the day before its game with Yale is considered conclusive proof that athletic relations will be resumed, and it is something that the oldest "grads" can remember no parallel for. Roper's action in coaching Harvard furnished the sensation of a week full of excitement.

Harvard men were elated over it, and Yale men, while commenting freely on the incident and discussing it from every point of view, were not prone to criticize Roper, although they characterized it as being "most unusual and extraordinary."

An annual football game between Princeton and Harvard would be looked upon most favorably by football men throughout the East. It has been long felt that Yale was at a disadvantage in having to meet both Princeton and Harvard. With this game added, each of the so-called "big three" would play two championship matches each year.

In 1905 Harvard decided not to meet the University of Pennsylvania on the gridiron. Since then the Crimson has wanted another championship match on her schedule. Princeton has not been satisfied with Cornell as a substitute for Harvard, and there is a possibility of her dropping the Ithacans from her schedule if she plays Harvard.
